BEIJING:

Beijing is the historical center of the last two imperial dynasties and the modern political center of China. With sites such as the Great Wall and Forbidden City, it is a tourist must see. However, Beijing has also experienced accelerated economic growth over the past decade and is truly an international city with Chinese characteristics.

SHANGHAI:

Shanghai is the commercial center of China. With a population nearing 20 million, it is also an incredible city of unique architecture and peoples from around the country and the world. Shanghai has plenty to see including one of the best historical museums in China, an incredible night skyline on the Bund, and a unique view of the city 1,000 feet up through a glass floor in the Pearl Television Tower.
